Sharing secrets

A good business model will survive in any time — good or bad. A pilot is expected to fly an aircraft irrespective of the weather, said Anil Singhvi, director on the board of the Foundation for Liberal And Management Education (FLAME), while addressing students. He was sharing the secrets of success with the postgraduate students of the FLAME School of Business recently. Also a vice-chairman of the Reliance Natural Resources Ltd (RNRL), Singhvi shared his experience in the business of cement where he started his career and rose to become the managing director of Ambuja Cement. Talking about leadership, he said, “Leadership largely embodies passion. Look for simple answers even to complex situations. You have to love what you are doing.”
